SENATOR PILLING.

The "Tall Oak of the White Clay Creek" stood like a stone wall throughout the entire session. Always firm, strong in his convictions, clear in his ideas, determined to do the right thing as he saw it, regardless of consequence, Senator Pilling, towering over and above all his colleagues, fulfilled all expectations of his admirers and his record will be the pride not only of himself but of his constituents.

In the Senate he has been the friend of all good measures and the relentless foe of all bad ones—he has been the rock upon which more than one bad bill has been wrecked. And Senator Pilling returns from the Senate with a record probably never excelled by any of his predecessors, commanding not only the admiration of his friends but also the profound respect of his political opponents.

THE PROGRESSIVE STEAMSHIP.

Some forty years ago the Great Eastern was launched. She was nearly 700 feet long, with 83 feet beam, but she could not develop more than 10,000 horse power with great coal consumption. This boat was far ahead of her time. Little by little a great ocean liner must be built up. Even had the travel of her day been sufficient to support the Great Eastern, her engines, through lack of knowledge on the part of their builders, were inadequate to the needs of such a boat.

The failure of the big boat was perhaps a good thing in its way. It set men to adding a little here and there to every new boat built. They studied as they went along. The few hours knocked off the record by some new boat, easily became days as the number of the products of the shipyards increased, till greyhounds of the deep followed one another with considerable regularity.

The tonnage increase was not made without grave fears. The 5,000 ton boat was hardly expected to live through a heavy sea. Now we have numbers of 5,000 and 10,000 tonners, and the new Campania is of 14,000 tons and 620 feet long, with about 30,000 horse power. Her sister ship, the Lucania, will be of the same description and will surpass her in speed, if it is a possible thing.

It might be supposed that these Cunarders would be left to monopolize the size of the steamship for a few years, or at least to set the limit, till it had been thoroughly tested by the building of parallel ships by other lines and a comparison of attainments. But scarcely is the Campania through with her maiden voyage, than we hear of a new vessel coming to the White Star line, well-named the Gigantic, for she is to be full 700 feet long with engines of 45,000 horse power, and a guaranteed speed of 27 knots an hour! The less than five-day boat will thus be suddenly sprung upon the public.

While a few boats of such swiftness may be very desirable, it is questionable if their multiplicity pay. Many travelers prefer the eight-day boats now on account of the rest and peace of such an ocean voyage, and these and the number who like to spend at least a week in going from shore to shore will probably always be in the majority.

SENATOR PILLING'S speech on the proposed taxation bill was one of the most powerful ever delivered in legislative halls, and will rank as one of the greatest speeches ever made in this State.

Very sensible advice is, if you can afford the time and expense, do not try to see all of the world's fair in a day or a week. The fair will be a liberal education for any one who views it understandingly.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has incurred the affliction of office seekers with great fortitude, but now in self-defense he has issued a notice declaring that he will hereafter refuse all personal interviews with persons seeking office, except such as he may request.

PADEREWSKI the great musician sailed for Europe last week. He made $180,000 from his musical engagements in this country, and we are not surprised that he was so much pleased with American audiences, that he promises to come again.

JOHN RUSKIN, has been offered the place of poet laureate of England, to fill the vacancy made by the death of Tennyson. He is better known as a prose writer and an art critic than a poet, and his appointment by Gladstone is a general surprise. He is 75 years old and much broken in health, both in body and mind, and already his career is regarded as about ended.

The death penalty as a punishment for murder was abolished in Michigan some years ago. But the increase of murders and other crimes has created a strong public sentiment in favor of restoring capital punishment. A bill to that effect before the State Legislature is favorably received. But the bill provides that only those convicted by direct evidence shall be hung, and as in a large majority of the criminal cases on record the evidence is more or less circumstantial, there will not be many murderers sent to the gallows even if the present law is amended.

The congregation of St. Bartholomew Church, New York, gave an extraordinary evidence of wealth and benevolence on Sunday. By simply a request from the pastor $80,000 was laid on the plate, for the purpose of improving the church edifice. The congregation numbers about 1,200, and is very wealthy, and the pastor says everybody gives according to their means. During the four years that Dr. Green has been the pastor of this church, $1,035,000 have been raised by voluntary contributions, he has never asked for a sum that he did not get it.

COLUMBUS XI was presented with a silver key by the Chicagoans to signify that the city was free to him. It is recalled that when our relief ships were sent to Russia during the recent famine, officers and sailors were given silver souvenirs of their visit, and these are highly prized. It has been suggested that something of the kind be struck off for the visiting naval officers and crews. If the time be too limited the Columbian souvenir coins might do. But if it is a possible thing, it would be better to have something specially designed, even if it be necessary to await an act of congress. The souvenir would reach the proper person in due time and would doubtless be highly prized in the family of the recipient. It is rather strange that this was not thought of before, and the souvenirs made ready for distribution last week.

The Washington State department is in a fair way to become involved in a dispute with Russia as well as Austria, over the race question. The Russian consul at New York has requested a passport issued by the State department to a New York woman of Hebrew blood who desires to visit Russia, on the ground that the laws of this country do not permit him to sign a passport for Jews. Our government will, of course, decline to discriminate between citizens of this country on account of religion or former allegiance and insist that the woman in question has just as much right to travel in Russia as an American as a Gracile citizen of the United States. The fact that Russia persecuting the Jews can not be allowed to make any difference in the status of an American in Russia, Jew or Gentile, black or white. Russia has it in her power to persecute her own Jewish subjects, but she must respect the rights of American citizens who are Jews.

With all the boasted progress of the age de siècle woman, she has not yet advanced beyond many of her old-time weaknesses, as is shown in the department of some of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Fair. The Board is composed of women from all over the country, and in intelligence, culture and morality are supposed to very fairly represent the best of the sex. But if all we read in the papers be true, and there is, of course, no reason to doubt it, their recent wrangles and petty jealousies can but cause a blush of shame on the part of the many whom they are supposed to represent. There will be a great many women's congresses at Chicago during the progress of the World's Fair, when their achievements in art, science and business will be appropriately celebrated. Among the most interesting exhibits of the great Fair are the results of the higher education, broader culture and wider opportunities that have been granted women. But the best evidence of her progress is naturally looked for in woman herself, and if in all the series of congresses held, it is shown that the women of today are better wives, mothers and sisters, than their grandmothers, and that the homes of today are brighter and happier than ever before, than the woman of the period will need no further defence.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, May 11, 1933.—The finances of a nation, like the blood of an individual, cannot be trifled with without danger. Up to this time the administration has followed the conservative line laid down by its predecessor, and as a natural consequence, it has been supported by patriotic citizens, without regard to political affiliations, and danger has been averted. But now, if those who are claiming to represent the administration are telling the truth, it is meditating a change, and a very dangerous one at that. According to the same men the President has determined, in order to compel Congress to unconditionally repeal the Sherman Silver law, to so manipulate our finances as to create a popular fear of a panic, and then to charge it all to the operation of the Sherman law. This is a short sighted policy, and if it is really carried out it cannot fail to react with deadly consequences upon its author. There are plenty of Republicans in Congress—Senator Sherman among them—who would be willing to vote to repeal the present Silver law, but there is not one of them who will support a policy which will risk a financial panic in order to frighten Congressmen into voting for its repeal.

It is well known now, and was equally well known when Mr. Cleveland was nominated, and elected upon a platform, which was interpreted to mean a gold basis for the gold men and free silver for the silver men, that his special hobby was the repeal of the Silver law. It is also well known that he has refused patronage to those Democratic Senators who will not promise to vote for its repeal. But these things do not effect the country at large; therefore no one seriously objected. But the case is very different when it is proposed to adopt a course that may effect disastrously every person in the United States as he will soon find out, if he persists in it.

Secretary Carlisle has made a personal investigation of the charges made by New York publications against the official integrity of assistant Secretary Spaulding, supervising special agent Tingle and General Tiedner, president of the board of general appraisers at the port of New York, and as a result authorized the publication of a statement affirming their innocence of the charges. The charge was that of undervaluing the importation of favored firms. As the officials mentioned are all hold over Republicans their exoneration by Secretary Carlisle is highly creditable both to him and them.

Senator Brice has been among the Democrats "outside the breasted" ever since the new administration began business. The other day the President, seemingly in a spirit of conciliation, asked Mr. Brice to name a good man for third auditor of the Treasury. Mr. Brice submitted three names, either of which would have been satisfactory to him. Several days later one of the Senator's chagrins the appointment was given to John C. Reilly, known to all Ohio people as a bitter personal enemy of Mr. Brice, making it appear that he had been asked to recommend a man for the place solely to be snubbed. Mr. Reilly declined the position, but that did not soften the affront put upon Mr. Brice, who lately remarked significantly: "Even the man with the longest credit has to face a day of settlement sometime."

The administration is delighted at its success in getting the reassembling of the International Monetary Conference postponed from May 30, to next November. It was afraid that if the conference came together again this spring it might really agree some plan for the increased use of silver as a money metal, which would have upset its plan for forcing Congress to act as it wishes.

The appointment mill is again at work, but it is not turning out much credit for the patient waiters. A few foreign appointments, bureau chiefs, postmasters, etc., have fallen into eagerly outstretched hands, but a majority of them have made more enemies than friends for the appointing power, because of the failure to recognize the recommendation of men whose positions in the party are such as to entitle them to influence.

Work upon the administration tariff bill is not proceeding as smoothly as it was expected to do. Obstacles are appearing on every side, and their number is constantly increasing, have become so numerous in fact, that it is understood that one radical change has already been made in the plan upon which it was originally proposed to construct the bill.

There was a great crowd at the railway station when I left Paris to go to Larouche, so I thought myself lucky to have only one other passenger in the compartment with me. He was a stern, middle-aged-looking person, and as he had nothing with him but a portfolio, I knew he would not travel far, and I could soon have the compartment all to myself.

But alas, I made too sure! Just as the train was going to start, I heard a discussion going on outside.

"No, no! I engaged a private compartment, and I must have it!" said a very feminine voice.

"I cannot give it to you, madam, for there is not one on the train," replied a guard.

"But I wrote and ordered it."

"Your letter was not received."

"Put on another carriage, then."

"That is impossible; we are just going to start—to be quick. There are two here."

"Is there?"

"Yes, madam."

A small, dark head appeared for a moment in the doorway of the compartment, and was suddenly withdrawn; and on a startled voice exclaimed:

"There are two gentlemen in there!"

"Very well, madam; I cannot give you a whole carriage to yourself."

"Then I shall not go at all!"

"As you please. The train is just going."

"Wait, wait; I am obliged to go with you. As there is absolutely no other carriage, I—but can I have a private compartment when I get to the next town?"

"Certainly, madam."

"You will telegraph for it?"

"Yes, madam."

"You promise?"

"Yes."

The door opened again, and the same head appeared, surrounded by a sort of crowd of parcels, wraps, etc.; a lady stepped into the compartment, a whistle blew, and we were off. The other gentleman politely rose and took the place to the left of me, so as to leave the whole of the opposite side for the new comer.

I did not do much more than glance at her of us, however, for she was so thick and flushed with indignation, she was no sooner seated than she began to arrange her satchels and to discuss with all the haste usually displayed by people having a long journey before them. She had a satchel, another satchel, and still another, and a pile of railway rugs.

I watched her proceedings out of the corner of my eye, and a single glance was enough to tell me that she was young and extremely pretty. The discovery pleased me not a little, it is much more agreeable to travel sitting opposite a woman than an ugly one!

She was very cold and the fair traveler developed a round her and gazed at her obstinately at the winter landscape, another passenger took some official documents out of his portfolio examined them, while I pretended to be absorbed in my newspapers.

At 11.30 o'clock we reached Larouche, as soon as the train stopped the women gathered up their papers, rose, and left us. The lady went to the door and asked the station-master, anxious tone:

"Have you been telegraphed from Paris for a private compartment?"

"Yes, madam, and I have already had the order on."

"What do you mean? I wait here!"

"Impossible, madam. We have no room here, but you can get one at the next town."

"That time will that be?"

"Five forty-five."

"I am the whole day! I cannot stay in my carriage until then—I cannot, and not."

"Be careful, madam, the train is going!"

"And the train started! She went to her seat indignant and without saying a word to me. I began reading my paper again, but I could not fix my eyes upon the news. I read the line over twenty times without knowing what it contained—I have not that I held the paper upside down most of this time. My fellow-traveler was distractingly pretty, and I tried to enter into conversation with her, but I did not know how to manage it. She was a lady, I knew, but I racked my brain for some original remark with which to break the ice, and all in vain. Nothing occurred except the weather, and that I despised.

I was still wondering, when the train came to a sudden halt, and a called out:

"Nonnenre! Twenty-five minutes delay!"

"Vis-à-vis rose, put off her rugs, and slipped on the seat and got off the train."

It was noon, and she was profliged. She went to the left side of the compartment, followed her.

At leisure to admire her graceful figure which was clad in a long cloak with a high collar. I observed also the wore a gray felt hat on her black hair, and that she had very few teeth.

I stepped into the restaurant with the other passengers, a disheveled, excited throng, and began eating and drinking boillie. As soon as I finished I strolled about and smoked a cigarette. The allotted five minutes were slipping by, the passengers began to return to the train. I went to my place, and that the lady had not yet come and on looking out of the window I saw her standing at a bookseller's stall. Her back was toward me, but I recognized the other cloak, the gray and the graceful figure.

"The other passengers were seated; the time was up, the guard called out, and she did not come. She would be left behind. Madam, madam!" I cried; but the time was too great, she could not return. There was hardly a minute

"What was I to do? Suddenly bright ideas came to me. I could not bear to think of her being left without her wraps in the bitter cold; poor little woman! She should at least have her belongings with her. I seized her three satchels and her rugs in my arms and threw them out of the window, calling to a guard who stood near:

"Give these to that lady—over there."

He picked them up and turned away, the train began to move, and at the same instant there entered at the opposite side of the train, breathless and hurried, my fellow traveler!

Horror! I had made a mistake. The lady at the bookstall was not the owner of the luggage. Yet her figure, her cloak, her hat were the same—an absurd resemblance. What was to be done now? A pretty mess I had made of it! While I stood speechless, she reached her seat and immediately exclaimed:

"Where are my satchels? Some one has taken all my things!"

Then for the first time she looked at me, and with what an expression of doubt and scorn! I shall never forget it.

"Pardon me," I stammered, "your property has not been stolen. It was left an Tonnerre."

"Why, what for?" she gasped, and then, as best I could, I explained. She gave me another look; it was worse than the first—I cannot describe it.

"I am profoundly grieved," I added, "but truly my intention was good. I did not want you to catch cold. Besides, your things are safe, and I shall telegraph—you will telegraph—we will telegraph—from the next station. I give you my word you shall have your things, if I have to go back and fetch them myself."

"Enough, sir," she answered, coldly. "I know what to do," and she sat down and looked out of the window. But alas, the poor little thing had now no warm rugs, and before very long she began to shiver. In vain she buttoned her cloak and turned up the collar. Her little teeth fairly chattered.

"Madam," I cried, "beg of you, on my knees, to take my rugs. You will catch cold, it will be my fault, and I shall never forgive myself."

"I do not wish to speak to you, sir," he said, coldly.

I grew excited. I had made such a delicious blunder, and she was such a lovely woman! Suddenly I took a desperate resolve.

"If you do not take this I shall throw myself off the train," I said, and laying my railway rug beside her, raised the car window, put out my hand and opened the door from the inside.

Was I in earnest? Between you and me, reader, I do not think I was. But I looked it, evidently, for my hearer exclaimed, in a voice of alarm: "You are crazy!"

"Take the rug or I jump!" I said.

She took it, put it around her, and marked, in a softened tone, as I closed the door and window:

"You will die of cold."

"It would be but a fit punishment for my unpardonable stupidity," I answered.

"You were not stupid, but hasty," she said, "and, as you told me, your intention was good; but how could you mistake that lady for me?"

"She was so charming," I explained and my listener smiled. The ice was broken—that is as far as the conversation went; literally, I was nearly frozen. However, I soon forgot the cold, for my companion was delightful, piquant, fascinating. She talked well, though with charming simplicity. She enjoyed traveling, just like me. She had been in Italy; so had I. Also in Spain; so had I. She longed for Egypt; in which I was. In literature, in music—in fact, in everything it was the same. We had precisely the same tastes. What was more, we soon discovered that we had several mutual acquaintances; we had probably attended the same receptions more than once. And I had never observed her, à Paris! heavens! where were my eyes?

After a time, although I was supremely happy, I became conscious of the penetrating cold. I did my best to conceal the fact, but when we reached Dijon, at 2.30 o'clock, my right foot was numb. Here we telegraphed to Marseilles for the satchels and rugs.

At Maceon my left foot was numb. Here we learned that the baggage would be sent to Marseilles the next day.

At Lyon-Ferrache it was my left hand's turn to be stiff; I observed, also, at my fair companion forgot to claim my private compartment.

At Valence my right hand followed it, but I learned that she was a widow, without children.

At Avignon my nose was blue, yet I noticed that she had not cared much for her first husband.

Marseilles, alas! I sneezed violently, and, with a gracious smile, she banded my rug and whispered "Adieu—revoir."

Then we parted, and I went to the hotel and dreamed all night at her last words, and woke the next day with the first cold in my head I had ever known. I hardly dared to show myself to my friends, who had asked me to dinner, and at last I decided to go, and that was with my ecstasy to find among the guests my charmer of the express train.

Hardly perceptible smile played under her lips when I was presented to her, and in a whisper I asked, "Tout va-t-il?"

"I have received them," she said, in the same tone.

"As we sat down to dinner the hostess told me: 'You have a terrible cold, but you catch it on the train!'"

"Probably," I said, "but I do not regret it."

He did not understand this strange remark, but I caught the swift, tender glance which my fellow traveler shot toward me across a steaming platter of cod fish.

Two weeks from to-day will be my wedding-day. —From the French of Jacques Normand.

Set your faces and your wishes to Spring Overcoats and Spring Suits.

The hands and the wit of our thousands of workers—cutters, helpers, sewers—have been gathering Spring goods into our house for many days. All ready now—we're glad to say.

Spring promises big for business. We've prepared big. The cloth buying amid the hum of mills, the quiet purchases from cloth makers who hunt us up, the making-up of one, two, five hundred suits at a stroke—interesting and perennially new as the story of how the wool off the sheep's back grows through a hundred processes into its perfect use is to your thoughtful mind—skip it all.

Don't skip this; you'll buy from the manufacturer direct or from a store that buys to sell again. Which will you do? Your dollars are at stake.

Will you buy your $10 suit from us?
Will you buy your $20 suit from us?
Will you buy your Spring overcoat from us?
Silk-lined or not, long or short—we have all.
We can save you 15 to 25 per cent., surely—per-haps more.

A CRUEL DRIVER.

Taken to Court for Ruining a Valuable Animal in Delaware City.

The case of the State vs. Samuel Fellmer, charged with cruelty and neglect in driving a horse, has resulted in an interesting trial this week. The case was called on Wednesday.

Frank Phillips, a liveryman of Delaware City, testified that he hired the mare to Samuel Fellmer, March 10th, to drive to Town. The witness said that when the horse was returned to his stable she was absolutely exhausted and was coughing out of a spot on the hip where the driver had cruelly lashed the animal with a whip. The horse was practically valueless by reason of the severe drive. It had been valued at $100 and was worth $5 a week to the owner as a livery mare prior to her cruel treatment.

In reply to the questions of Mr. Conrad, the witness stated that the mare was coughing out of a spot on the hip where the driver had cruelly lashed the animal with a whip. The horse was practically valueless by reason of the severe drive. It had been valued at $100 and was worth $5 a week to the owner as a livery mare prior to her cruel treatment.

John Murphy testified that the mare was exhausted when Samuel Fellmer returned her to the stable and blood was dripping from her flanks.

Thomas Vail is a veterinarian at Delaware City. The witness testified that he had seen the mare driven by Samuel Fellmer and said she was exhausted. He saw blood coming out of the mare's mouth and he had seen the animal worth $100 before she had been driven by Samuel Fellmer. He wouldn't give $5 for her now.

Major W. E. Reynolds, of Delaware City, testified that he saw the mare after Samuel Fellmer had driven her and she was exhausted. In opening for the defense, Mr. Conrad stated that the only material witness would be the defendant himself.

Before hearing testimony the case was held over until afternoon.

For the defense the defendant, Samuel Fellmer, was called to the stand in the afternoon. He testified that he left Delaware City about 4:45 on the morning of March 10th and 11th. Thence he drove to Middletown, to Townsend and returned to Delaware City. The horse was "kind of slow." He reached Delaware City about 5 o'clock. On the return trip the horse seemed tired and he raised the animal and appeared to befit when he started out. The horse fell once. The roads were in the worst condition he had ever seen them in. He walked some of the distance. He offered to pay Phillips for the hire of the horse, but Phillips said he could settle some other time.

On cross examination he said he was muddy when he got back, owing to having walked, his grip which remained in the carriage was muddy also, owing to the mud thrown by the wheels. He denied that he told Phillips that he was going only to Odessa. He admitted using the whip when he started out. He rode the horse several times. He returned using the whip and he was tired. He wanted to get back to Delaware City to catch the 4:30 train.

Both sides resting Mr. Fellmer spoke briefly to the court and then addressed the jury. Reviewing the testimony he brought the time of driving thirty-four miles to five hours and said that with the roads in such a condition he knew that he could not have done it without being injured.

Mr. Conrad in addressing the jury said he thought his client had in this measure used more force than necessary. If the roads had been good and the horse good nothing would have happened. He made the average driving between four and five miles an hour.

The case went to the jury with a brief charge, and in ten minutes a verdict of guilty was rendered.

Fellmer was sentenced to pay $150 fine and the costs. The fine will go to the owner of the horse. Chief Justice Lore said that the verdict was right, the prisoner having cruelly treated the beast. The costs are considerable. Phillips is reported to have offered to settle for $100.

Completely Cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Mrs. Mary E. O'Fallon, a very intelligent lady of Piqua, Ohio, was poisoned while assisting physicians at an autopsy 5 years ago, and soon terrible ulcers broke out on her head, arms, tongue and throat. Her hair all came out. She weighed but 78 lbs., and saw no prospect of help. At last she began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla and at once improved; could soon get out of bed and walk. She says: "I became perfectly cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla."

And am now a well woman. I weigh 128 lbs., eat well and do the work for a large family. My case seems a wonderful recovery, and physicians look at me in astonishment, as almost like one raised from the dead."

HOOD'S PILLS should be in every family medicine chest. Once used, always preferred.
